Press Release

Scot and Debbie Hollonbeck • 212 Fayetteville Rd.

The Hollonbecks' home, built in 2007, was designed by Decatur architect Eric Rawlings in the style of Frank Lloyd Wright, a leader of the Prairie School architectural movement. Scot and Debbie had a hand in designing their home and Debbie acted as contractor for the project.

The ceilings and walls are heavily insulated and passive solar is used in the area that Scot calls his "man cave." Recycled drywall was used throughout.

Kitchen appliances are Energy Star-rated and the cabinets are formaldehyde-free. Bathrooms feature dual-flush toilets and two of the sinks were found in dumpsters. The homeowners did not use any carpeting or vinyl, and painted with low-toxic paint.

A rain harvest/water retention system collects 4,400 gallons of rainwater runoff in pressurized, gravity-fed cisterns in various locations around the property. The water is used to irrigate the landscaping. Notice the rain chains as you walk to the front door. These are positioned at various spots to aid in the collection of rainwater. Native plantings and eco-friendly gardening make a lovely landscaped yard. Scot is a former Olympic and Paralympic Champion and some of his medals and awards are on display in the home.
